

QQC #3: Driscoll Responses

Quote: This quote caught my attention from the reading because I thought it related to how we'll be forming our annotated bibliography in this class. For example, our secondary research will be finding and examining scholarly and non-scholarly sources in order to learn more about our anticipated field of study. From there, we can fill in our own data from what we learned about the secondary research we conducted. Using our annotated bibliography will ultimately help us develop our primary research for all of our projects in this class.

Comment: I really like your comment to this quote and how you applied the idea of discourse communities behind it. I also agree with you that in order to avoid poor research questions for our projects in this class, we must be direct and specific about our discourse communities. The more specific we are about what interests us and what our ideal discourse community is, the stronger our research questions will be.

Question: Will we be having to make this kind of decision in the research questions we created when we get to Project 3 and have to take a stance on a topic in our field of study? Reading this about research questions made me think about Project 3 and what we eventually have to decide on.
